

Proclamation

by Governor Patrick Morrisey

- Whereas, the foundation of our nation is built upon principles of faith, hope, and unity; and
- Whereas, throughout its history, West Virginia has encountered both challenges and victories, and in each moment, West Virginians have turned to prayer—seeking courage, comfort, inspiration, and moments of joyous celebration; and
- Whereas, West Virginia’s legislative body recognizes the importance of seeking divine assistance in our work, and the need for reflection, humility, and discernment as we serve the people who have entrusted us with the responsibilities of leadership; and
- Whereas, it is essential that we, as public servants, unite in prayer to seek the wisdom to craft laws that promote justice, peace, and the welfare of all individuals; and
- Whereas, prayer serves as a reminder of our collective commitment to work together for the common good, to serve with integrity, compassion, and respect for the dignity of every person. It inspires the hearts of all who serve in government and strengthens our resolve to carry out our duties with honor and care; and
- Whereas, we express our faith and exercise our freedom through prayer, coming together in both private moments and public gatherings across West Virginia to unite our hearts and voices.

Now, Therefore, Be it Resolved that I, Patrick Morrisey, Governor of the Great State of West Virginia, do hereby proclaim February 12, 2025, as:
